Experimentation

“I am really interested in this movement and have decided that I want to create images based around this. For this have taken inspiration from John Baldessari and have recreated his works with the dots in front of people’s faces. I used photographs which I have already taken and just added in the dots on top of the images.”

“I had the idea to create a performance where my friend Sophie would be acting as though she was a stropo, stubborn child and Robyn acting as her parent trying to drag her away from the scene. This was a humorous performance idea as it challenged societal preconceptions on what is considered normal.”

“For this image on top of itself and rotated it each time. I think this worked well as it looks odd and possibly like something from a dream where you have no idea what is going on and there are just so many faces everywhere making you confused”

“For this shoot I went with the theme of not being able to see any bare skin. I like the idea of this as I wanted to portray people as invisible and can only be seen for their clothing. I wondered what it would be like to live in a world where everyone is invisible”

Experimentation/ Risks

Tania Ferreira

“This still image came from the recorded performance of me standing between two people playing ping pong (without the table). We wanted to do something in which we would cause an obstruction because we were interested in how they would react.”

Sophie Ellis-Fox

“This photograph was taken outside a French shop of the group having a sword fight with the products. We were taking the phrase ‘try it before you buy it’ literally.”

“The aim of this photo was to take a risk and do something different with this everyday machine. It was risky because there many cars around. “

Robyn Wadsworth

“This still image represented the film we made of Shannon climbing on these bars in a public space. This was quite an interesting performance.”

"I love this image because I like that I captured the expressions of the passing tourists along with the performance my friend was doing."

Here, a friend of mine had created a sign written in French asking if this couple would like to play with bubbles with her. My friend took a chance asking the couple to help her, we challenged social preconceptions of what is acceptable to do with strangers and I personally had to change my personality in order to gather the confidence to take photographs of total strangers.

Whilst I was climbing it, my group and I noticed that the three ladies on the bench in front of the rack we rather surprised and curious as to what I was doing and why. Perhaps they were slightly concerned in case I fell. Perhaps they were confused on what the point of me doing such a thing was.
